

Six tips for Video Interview Success

Thanks to the advancement of technology today, video interview is becoming more common for companies to conduct virtual meet-ups. Often, these interviews are done via a common technology which involves the candidate and the interviewer interacting with each other. Here are six tips that may help you to ace for your next video interview.

1 Check your tech.

Be familiar with the webcam and microphones of your computer. Test the connection and make sure that there are no technical issues that will hinder the interviews.

2 Prepare your surroundings

Check and make sure that the background of where you will be sitting at is suitable and not visually distracting. Also make sure there isn't any auditory disturbance which may disrupt your conversation with the interviewer.

3 Dress to impress

While it is too tempting just to wear your pyjamas since you are doing the interview at the comfort of your own home, dressing up appropriately will display your professionalism to the position offered. Remember, appearance does matter.

4 Look at the camera, not the screen.

Eye contact is critical during an in-person interview, and it adds a nice touch on a video interview as well. Keep looking at the webcam as you would be looking at the interviewer.

5 Think about timing

Time is of the essence. Be mindful of your answers and make sure that it is precise and to the point. Avoid dragging your answers as it may bore the interviewer and may lower your chances to getting the job.

6 Relax, keep calm and remember that it is just another process

Remember that while you certainly need to be calm, collected, and confident in order to score the job, the interview is not a life-or-death situation. The interviewers are humans, too—and they will understand and forgive a few minor nervous blips.
